Some years previous to the war a gentleman by the name of Zimmerman died, in Greenbrier county, Va., leaving a wife and three small children, one of them a mere infant. The grief of the wife was so intense at the loss of her husband that her reason became impaired, and laboring under a temporary fit of insanity, she left her home and friends secretly, taking her infant daughter with her, and leaving the other two children, a daughter and son behind her. Those who felt an interest in the fate of the unfortunate woman and child, supposed that they had been drowned; as no trace of them could be discovered. And so the matter rested, until the daughter and son left behind had grown up, when, by some means, they were put upon the track of the missing ones. They found that the mother had wandered with her child to Bedford county, Va., that there the authorities had aken charge of her, and that she had been sent to one of the Lunatic Asylums of the State, where she had died after remaining about two years. The only thing then to be done was to find, if possible, the lost sister. It was ascertained that the child had been left with a Mr. Wade of Bedford county, and an effort was made to learn from him its wherebouts. Letters were written to him, but he declined to give any response. Efforts were made through other parties to obtain information from was prevailed upon, and told that by young woman of her years, but she consent of court he had given the
